Lecture 37: Success in Personal Interviews
(PIs)

CONCEPTS COVERED

1. To prepare for behavioral / situational interviews
2. In your Answer...
3. To prepare for video interviews
4. If you are asked to prepare the videotape...
5. To prepare for a phone interview
6. Communication Behaviors of Successful & Unsuccessful Interviewees
7. Checklist for Evaluating Interviews

To prepare for behavioral and / situational interviews?

1. Think about the skills you've used that could transfer to other jobs.
2. Learn as much as you can about the culture of the company you hope to join.

In your Answer...

- Describe the situation
- Tell what you did
- Describe the outcome
- Show that you understand the implications of what you did and how you might modify your behavior in other situations

Situational interviews: put you in a situation that allows the Interviewer to see whether you have the qualities the company is seeking.

To prepare for phone interviews...

- Tape yourself so you can make any adjustment in pronunciation and voice qualities.
- Practice short answers to questions.
- After giving a short answer in the interview, say, “Would you like more information?”
- Without a visual channel, you cannot see the body language that tells you someone else wants to speak.

Kinds of video interviews

Two kinds of video interviews:

1. First kind is a live interview using video conferencing equipment. For this kind of interview, use the same guidelines for a phone interview.
2. In the second kind, the company sends a list of questions, asking the applicant to tape the responses.

To prepare for phone interviews...

1. Practice short answers
 2. Re-tape until you look good
- Try to schedule phone interviews for home, not work, and for a time when things will be quiet.
 - If a company wants to interview you on the spot, accept only if the timing is good.
 - If it isn't, say so: "we just set down to Could you call back in thirty minutes?"
 - Then, get your information about the company, ask the family / friends to be quiet, and get your thoughts in order.

If you are asked to prepare the videotape...

- Practice your answers.
- Tape the Interview as many times as necessary to get a tape that presents you at your best.
- Be specific. Since the employer cannot ask follow up questions you need to be detailed about how your credential could help the employer.

For both interviews, smile when you talk to put more energy into your voice.

The Communication Behaviors of Successful and Unsuccessful Interviewees

Question asked	Unsuccessful Interviewees	Successful Interviewees
Statements about the position	Had only vague ideas of what they wanted to do; changed 'ideal job' up to six times and during the interview.	Specific and consistent about the position they wanted; were able to tell why they wanted the position.
Use of company name	Rarely used the company name	Referred to the company by name four times as often as unsuccessful interviewees.
Knowledge about company and position	Made it clear that they were using the interview to learn about the company and what it offered.	Made it clear that they had researched the company; referred to specific brochures, journals, or people who had given them information.
Level of interest, enthusiasm	Responded neutrally to interviewer's statements: "Okay," "I see." Indicated reservations about company or locations.	Expressed approval of information provided by the interviewer nonverbally and verbally: "That's great!" Explicitly indicated desire to work for this particular company.
Nonverbal Behaviour	Made little eye contact; smiled infrequently	Made eye contact often; smiled
Backing up on interviewer's clues	Gave vague or negative answers even when a positive answer was desired. 7('How are your math skills?').	Answered positively and confidently – and backed up the claim with a specific example of 'problem solving' or 'toughness.'
Response to topic shift by Interviewer	Resisted topic shift	Accepted topic shift
Use of industry terms and technical jargon	Used almost no technical jargon.	Used technical jargon: "point of purchase display," "NCR charge," "two-column approach," "direct mail."
Use of specifics in answer	Gave short answers – ten words or fewer, sometimes only one word; did not elaborate. Gave general responses: 'Fairly well.'	Supported claims with specific personal experiences, comparisons, statistics, statements of teachers and employers.
Questions asked by interviewee	Asked a small number of general questions.	Asked specific questions based on knowledge of the industry and the company. Personalized questions: "What would my duties be?"
